LGIAsuper kicks off first Annual Members Meeting in Brisbane

LGIAsuper members descended on Brisbane City Hall last week for the fund's first Annual Members Meeting (AMM).

Members heard from LGIAsuper's executive leadership team on the fund's growth and performance over the past 12 months, as well as its investment strategy heading into 2020 and beyond.

They also had the opportunity to speak candidly and directly with the fund's decision makers, and to receive Super Health Checks from its superannuation specialists.

LGIAsuper CEO Kate Farrar said the AMM was a fantastic concept because it gave the fund a chance to explain in detail to members how it was looking after their retirement savings.

"Our members trust us with one of their most significant assets, so maintaining our integrity and transparency is extremely important," Ms Farrar said.

"I am also incredibly proud of what our fund has achieved for members over the last 12 months and the AMM provided an ideal platform to showcase some of these efforts.

"In broad terms, we have worked very hard as a fund to harness global knowledge and innovations to improve the efficiency and effectiveness of our operations.

"We have entered into significant new partnerships that will help us to improve our services, grow our returns, and succeed in the ever-changing landscape in which we operate. It is all part of our mission to deliver the best possible value to our members.

"Last week's inaugural LGIAsuper AMM marks a significant milestone in our fund's 54-year history and I look forward to the prospect of welcoming more members to our AMM in 2020."

Speaking at the AMM, LGIAsuper member Richard Diehm said he found the event very useful.

"I actually discovered there were some areas of my super that were lacking, but now I have the correct information and forms needed to get on top of my super," Mr Diehm said.
